Hello,

I have a reporter in Minneapolis working on a story for Friday related to a Federal Register notice posted on Nov. 8, 2016. It proposes changes to the IVCC process so that a person who comes to the security checkpoint without ID must first provide information that they have a state identification compliant with REAL ID standards. I have attached the FR notice for your information.

This is consistent with what we have heard regarding IVCC and persons licensed in non-compliant REAL ID states, specifically that TSA officers will not conduct an IVCC check on a passenger who is licensed in a non-compliant state.

TSA Announces Enhancements to Airport ID Requirements to Increase Safety

News & Happenings

June 5, 2008

Beginning Saturday, June 21, 2008 passengers that willfully refuse to provide identification at security checkpoint will be denied access to the secure area of airports. This change will apply exclusively to individuals that simply refuse to provide any identification or assist transportation security officers in ascertaining their identity.

This new procedure will not affect passengers that may have misplaced, lost or otherwise do not have ID but are cooperative with officers. Cooperative passengers without ID may be subjected to additional screening protocols, including enhanced physical screening, enhanced carry-on and/or checked baggage screening, interviews with behavior detection or law enforcement officers and other measures.

Under the law that created TSA, the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, the TSA administrator is responsible for overseeing aviation security (P.L. 107-71) and has the authority to establish security procedures at airports (49 C.F.R. § 1540.107). Passengers that fail to comply with security procedures may be prohibited from entering the secure area of airports to catch their flight (49 C.F.R. § 1540.105(a)(2)).

This initiative is the latest in a series designed to facilitate travel for legitimate passengers while enhancing the agency's risk-based focus - on people, not things. Positively identifying passengers is an important tool in our multi-layered approach to security and one that we have significantly bolstered during the past 18 months.

Brian,

Thanks for sharing. I copied in Scott Houston for his awareness. We have been discussing many of these questions internally here at TSA HQ and with the Department. We are still finalizing our future procedures as they relate to REAL ID and have another meeting next week to further the process along. I expect that we will see more and more of these types of questions in the not too distant future from elected officials in non-compliant states and states on a limited extension.

Dan:

Good morning!

Just wanted you to be aware of the many detailed questions from the office of Representative Jonathan Kreiss-Tomkins of the Alaska State Legislature (see below). We received the questions yesterday, and we referred him to OLA. Thought the info might be helpful to you.

Will a temporary version of a REAL ID (a paper temporary ID) suffice to get through TSA?

Are commercial airlines obligated to provide transportation to anyone who pays the fee, because they are common carriers, or is transportation contingent on a security screening? Can airlines legally require that individuals produce identification? Does any current Federal law, regulation, or TSA policy require all airline passengers, without exception, to show ID?

Is the TSA website intended to be a complete, authoritative, or legally binding statement of laws or regulations, or merely a general summary?

Do statements on the TSA website create any legal rights or obligations?

The TSA website says that, "Beginning October 1, 2020, every traveler will need a REAL ID-compliant license or state ID or another acceptable form of identification to fly within the U.S."

https://www.tsa.gov/sites/default/files/resources/realid_factsheet.pdf

Is this statement correct, or are there exceptions to "every"? Does TSA mean what they say when they say that individuals will not be able get on the plane without federally compliant ID?

Right now (pre-REAL ID) it seems it is negotiable and you may be able to fly without proper ID if you go through more screening, and the TSA website says that . One of the committee members, for example, said that he was allowed to fly recently without ID, but he had to go through additional screening and use a red bin going through security. Will this extra rigorous screening be available in the future as an option for individuals who do not have compliant ID?

In Gilmore v. Gonzales (435 F.3d 1125 at 1136), the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, after reviewing the Security Directives then in effect, found that "The identification policy requires that airline passengers either present identification or be subjected to a more extensive search."

Has the policy described by the 9th Circuit in this decision changed?

If so, can you cite any law and/or regulations enacted or promulgated since that decision which changed this policy?

Has the TSA published any Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (NPRM) that would, if finalized, change this policy?

Is the TSA aware of any bill pending in Congress that would, if enacted, change this policy?

Will completion of TSA Form 415 ("Certification of Identity) and screening continue to be an "acceptable form of identification" for airline travel by people without REAL ID compliant ID documents? If not, can you cite the statute and/or regulation which made or authorized this change?

I will be bringing this up at a REAL ID meeting tomorrow with leadership. As of now, Alaska still has an extension, but it runs out in June unless the Secretary extends it further.

Dan:

Hello from Alaska! It was nice chatting with you the other day! Thank you for the info you shared related to the imminent enforcement of the REAL ID Act in the aviation environment. As you know, Alaska is currently non-compliant.

During our conversation, you mentioned (b)(5)
(b)(5) You also said the COO was going to be hosting a meeting in the near future to discuss REAL ID Act enforcement. In return, I briefly mentioned the nuances of air travel in Alaska (b)(5)

Many

in Alaska live off the land and seldom (if ever) travel to any city except for health care (usually funded by the state) – and they will never (repeat, never) bother going to the DMV to obtain a driver's license or state ID – even if the state eventually becomes compliant. Attached are some documents that do not specifically address the current issue, but the letter from former Senator Mark Begich to former Secretary Johnson and former Administrator Pistole does a nice job explaining the issue in more general terms. Also attached is Mr. Pistole's response to the Senator, as well as his update to the Secretary's Chief of Staff. Not sure if the information is helpful, but wanted you to be fully prepared for any meeting with the COO.

(b)(5)

As I shared with you, we in Alaska will be happy to assist in any way we can.

Thanks Dan!

Subject: RE: TSA Enforcement at Airports

Hi All,

Mr. Meehan provided the attached comment in the PRA mailbox.

Scott/Howard,

Would you like to provide a response to the questions and comments in the document?

Questions:

How will travelers be notified at the airports in advance of the scheduled January 2018 enforcement?

What kind of signage will precede enforcement and subsequently be posted at airports?

Have notices been sent to the airlines so they can notify passengers to bring alternate identification if they do not possess a REAL ID compliant driver's license or ID?

What kind of additional personnel will be needed to account for the number of travelers who present noncompliant identification at the airport?

Comments:

Capture Documentation

If documentation is presented, TSA should capture the documentation presented via electronic scan. Should a crime be committed, the scan of the identification presented would provide value to an investigation.

Verifying the validity of noncompliant licenses

The REAL ID standards are intended to mitigate the risk that an individual will present fraudulent identification to assume or create a new identity. However, there is some identity management value that can be attached to a noncompliant license. Statutorily, it is only insufficient for "official purposes." TSA should use the noncompliant driver's license, in part, to verify the holder's identity. There are systems that allow for the verification of a limited data set, such as full name, date of birth, and most importantly, the document number of the driver's license.

Knowledge based authentication

The notice states that TSA uses knowledge based authentication to verify the identity of a traveler who cannot or will not present sufficient proof of identity at the screening checkpoint. According to DRAFT National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) Special Publication 800-63A Digital Authentication Guideline Enrollment and Identity Proofing, using knowledge based authentication as the only means of verifying an identity ranks as "adequate." Given the continued risk to aviation security and the growing availability of complete online identity packages via the Dark Web and Tor networks, we recommend that TSA utilize a multifactor method of identity verification. According to the NIST standard, a "superior" level of identity verification includes the use of biometrics. Given that the traveler would be submitting only biographic information via a form, TSA should phase in the collection of physical data including a front facial image and fingerprints. If the passenger has been previously enrolled in a federal program, biometric technology can seek to confirm the identity of a traveler. It may also be used to compare that facial image and fingerprints against various watch lists to check for known or suspected terrorists as well as for outstanding wants and warrants.

The knowledge based authentications completed by TSA's Identity Verification Call Center should be conducted consistent with the DRAFT NIST Special Publication 800-63A Digital Authentication Guideline Enrollment and Identity Proofing Requirements. Section 5.3.2. "Knowledge Based Verification Requirements" includes minimum standards for the use of knowledge based verification.

Kind regards,

Christina

TSA Hints at What REAL ID Airport Enforcement Will Look Like in January, 2018

Andrew Meehan, November 29, 2016

A Federal Register announcement on November 11th provides insight into how the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) will treat travelers who present driver's licenses from non-REAL ID states beginning in January, 2018.

The 2005 REAL ID Act prohibits federal agencies from accepting driver's licenses for identification purposes that do not meet standards set by the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). The REAL ID standards, published in 2008, aim to prevent terrorists and criminals from fraudulently obtaining a driver's license under an assumed or fictitious identity. For more information about the REAL ID Act and standards please click here.

Today, REAL ID enforcement is occurring at all secure federal facilities and military installations that require identification for entry. Military bases across the country have announced when each would stop accepting driver's licenses from states that do not meet the REAL ID standards. DHS provided early notice when it published an enforcement schedule in December 2013 outlining when enforcement would begin. Federal facility and military base announcements regarding enforcement have been consistent with that schedule. Since the federal government started enforcing the REAL ID Act, many states have moved forward with commitments to comply and actual implementation. This year, Louisiana, New Hampshire, Illinois, Idaho, New Mexico and Massachusetts all enacted legislation that allowed their respective states to implement the REAL ID standards.

Enforcement at the airports

However, one of the biggest questions regarding REAL ID enforcement at the airports is how the process would work for travelers who present non-compliant driver's licenses. How will TSA confirm the identity of the traveler and allow that person to continue to travel? Will TSA segregate those travelers from the general population of travelers?

TSA's announcement provides some insight into one of those questions: how TSA will confirm the identity of travelers who present noncompliant IDs. Travelers who present driver's licenses from noncompliant states will be treated as presenting no IDs at all.

How would the process work? We don't have all the details yet, however, it's likely the following would occur.

A traveler presents a driver's license from a state that is not compliant or does not have an extension to meet the REAL ID standards to a TSA officer at the screening checkpoint before entering the gate.

The TSA officer refers the traveler to a separate area of the screening area to complete the Certification of Identity form (Form 415) that requires the traveler's name and address and the affirmative declaration that the form is a true description of identity.

After completing the form, the traveler is connected with TSA's Identity Verification Call Center, which, using commercial and government databases, generates a series of questions to verify the individual's identity, a process known as knowledge based authentication.

Once the traveler's identity is confirmed and matched to the boarding pass presented, the traveler will be able to pass through the screening checkpoint. TSA estimates that it will take three minutes to complete the form.

Impact on the noncompliant states

The impact on the states that have not complied with the REAL ID standards nor received an extension to do so will likely be significant. TSA may be able to ameliorate some of these issues with dedicated space at the airport to complete the ID verification process, signage and messaging to prepare confused travelers. However, it's much more likely that space constraints at the airport and confusion by the traveling public will result in long lines and delays in air travel in non-compliant states. Airline hub terminals in non-compliant states like St. Louis, Missouri and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania are likely to face major passenger congestion if their states continue to be non-compliant.

Nathan, Susan has a few general questions on the documents for you:

I know you are busy this week- feel free to call if it is easier to quickly talk though these questions.

Thank you,
